W. A. BRADY LOSES SUIT AGAINST ERLANGER

Court Decides Producer Got
His Share of Chicago
Profits.

Supreme Court Justice Grierich dismissed yesterday the suit of William A. Brady against Abraham Erlanger. Brady sought an accounting of profits from the Chicago Auditorium and to compel Erlanger to return a $20,000 fee for leasing the house. He also asked damages, charging that the lease had been sold for less than it was worth.

Justice Grierich said that Brady conceded that the Auditorium venture was a partnership instead of a stock company and that he had a half interest instead of only 37½ per cent. The court said that the testimony showed that soon after Brady began negotiations for the lease he asked Erlanger's cooperation and Erlanger succeeded in making a lease for a longer period than Brady had been able to get. The court said that Brady put $10,000 into the project, but later his partner, Joseph R. Grismer, paid him $5,000 and took half his interest. The court said that the $10,000 was paid back to Brady and Grismer a year later and soon afterward a dividend of $10,000 was declared and checks for $10,000 of this amount were sent to Brady and Grismer. Justice Grierich said that the directors passed a resolution in the absence of Erlanger awarding him $20,000 of the $100,000 received for the lease for his services and Erlanger testified that he spoke to Brady about this allowance and Brady thought it reasonable. He told Erlanger he ought to have $10,000 for his expenses and Erlanger paid him the money. On this point the court refers to the following letter, "couched in familiar and affectionate style," from Brady to Erlanger:

"MY DEAR AB: Here is my bill for expenses preliminary to leasing the Auditorium."

Brady said yesterday that he would appeal.

Thomas is 24 years old and lives at 121 Hiram street. He was arrested yesterday morning while standing in a hallway in the Tombs police court on a charge of attempted suicide.

He said that he had relatives in Brooklyn, but he did not wish to hear of the occurrence and refused to give their address. He was held without bail.
